The witness proceeded to bring a gill of lager-beer contained in his nose, and a half gill of lager-beer contained in his lips in contact with a venerable Bible, which has been so familiar with crime by long association, that we almost wonder the text has not been long since corrupted as much as the cover. Lager-beer and the Bible having come in contact, lager-beer is supposed to be incapable of lying.

A MURDEROUS SHOEMAKER.

Davier Stevens attempted to stab his wife Catharine with a shoe-knife. After throwing the lapstone at her and giving her a sound welting with the strap, he concurred to make a clean job of it and finish her up. Accordingly he threw his kit of tools at her one by one, concluding with the work-bench, and then made the final assault with the weapon first named. The assault with the weapon first named. The little tools didn't hurt her much; the lapstone only knocked her down, and the bench merely cut her head open; but the knife came near making Catharine a "sub-ject" for the doctors, The Judge not ap-proving of war to the knife, locked up

DUTCH CHARLYY SEEING THE BALLOON. Charles Duane had been to see the bal-toon go up, and on his returning journey everything seemed to be going up; the crees went up and turned somersots, the people all went up and stood on their heals in the clouds till the money run out of their pockets; the sidewalk tried to go up, but only got as far as Charley's head, with which it came in contact; Charley's head then went up—at least so he supposes, for he immediately saw innumerable stars; the brick tavern on the corner went up, turned over sideways, and emptied all the chamber crockery out of the windows. Charley's coat went up—the "spout," and didn't come back; Charley's boots followed his coats—also his umbrella and silk pocket handkerchief. Charley say a whiskey shop his coats—also his umbrells and silk pocket handkerchief. Charley saw a whiskey shep going up—tried to stop it and fell into the cellar. Charley saw a fence going up—tried to stop that, but the fence took Charley's hat off with the corner picket, and he hasn't seen it since. A lamp-post went up like a rocket, a cedar wash tub went up like a homb a policemen went up and turned a bomb, a policeman went up and turned into a cloud shaped like a codfish; an Irish woman with a litter of Hibernian brats went up like a second edition of Join Roger's wife and family—in fact, everything went up but "Erie," in which Charley owns a quarter of a share which he drew in a lottery, and that obstinately said at fifty two and a half, with symptoms of going down instead of up By invitation of the Court, Charley himself "went up"—for ten days.

THE YOUNG MAN WHO GORS ON A SPREE.

Percy Delancey, Esq., was brought in by a policeman for disturbing the rest and quiet of an unappreciative neighborhood by bawling forth at midnight unmelodious yells, which, when apprehended, he assured the officer were capital imitations of Sontag and Grisi. Mr. Delancey, although pretending to gentility, and disguised in some of the habiliments that gentlemen wear, had been discovered by the policeman in the street in a most plebeian state of drunk—not so much so but that he could sing, the street in a most plebeian state of drunk—not so much so but that he could sing, as he called it, and could talk after an original fashion of his own. His ideas were slightly confased; he informed the officer that he had been to hear Louisa Crown sing the Pyne Diamonds, and that he met a friend who took him to a billiard shop to see a clam race; that he and his friend bet the whiskey on the result; that he drunk for both, and that they had passed the remainder of the evening in a "magnorious manner," singing "Storm Columbus," "Yankee Boodles," and the "Scar Scangled Bladder."

The officer had taken him to the lock-up,

The officer had taken him to the lock-up, where he had finished the night singing "Good Old Daniel," whistling the Prima Donna Waltz, and playing an imaginary piano on the floor, in which attempt he had broken off his finger pails and art his midplane on the floor, in which attempt he had broken off his finger nails and put his wrist out of joint. When brought into Court he was still wild, and disposed to regale the assembled company with a numerous collection of songs, which he had at his tongue's end. His shirt-collar was wilted, his neck-tie was noisting towards his right tongue's end. His shirt-collar was wilted, his neck-tie was pointing towards his right, eye like that of Burton in the "Toodles," his hair was out of curl, and the damp of the cell or the excitement of the occasion had so affected his hair dye, that one-half his meustache was a dirty yellew, and the other a pale green, while his goatee was a brilliant brick color, picked out with spots of bright blue. He kept an eye constantly on the Judge, while he distributed the glances of the other equally among the officers and other spectators. He was musically obstinate, refusing to answer any questions or make any remarks except in scraps of songs, which he sung in a low voice, mixing up the tunes in a most perplexing manner. Being possessed of an plexing manner. Being possessed of an excellent memory, and having a large assortment of melodies at his command, his sortment of melodies at his command, his answers were sometimes more acquising than relevant. The Judge proceeded to interrogate him somewhat as follows:—

Judge—What is your name, sir?
